"As we emerge from a time overshadowed by uncertainty related to the global pandemic, people crave content that feels familiar yet fresh, but also evokes feelings through authentic, inclusive, and unfiltered experiences," said Brenda Milis, Principal of Consumer and Creative Insights at Adobe.

"These trends are indicative of how creators are envisioning and shaping our world and using their platforms to share content that brings joy and happiness in their own unique styles to people globally."

Here is a closer look at the four key Adobe Stock 2023 Creative Trends:

Psychic Waves

The post-pandemic shift towards prioritizing mental health and wellness is driving new ways of exploring spirituality, nature, and wellness. With 46% of Gen Z saying they are anxious and stressed, there is a need for the visual effect of Psychic Waves, which includes calming, or spiritual, gradients full of vibrant colors.

This new trend is focused on creative authenticity as an outlet for expression, including escaping reality, through psychedelic gradients, vibrant colors, and aesthetics that imply blurred vision.

Real is Radical

In combating perfectionist content, the Real is Radical trend is a celebration of candid, unvarnished moments, experiences, and realities. Brands are embracing campaigns featuring all races, genders, ages, abilities, and sizes — swapping out curated for candid moments. According to recent Pinterest

Body Neutrality report, there is a 36% "loving myself" searches and 32% "how to become more confident" searches. The trend has major presence across social brand campaigns and wildly successful new apps, like BeReal and Locket. Ranging from rebellious, aggressive, and provocative to deeply vulnerable, Real is Radical visuals create powerful connections and inspire a sense of community across media channels and platforms.

Retro Active

Inspired by Gen Z creators evolving and experimenting with the aesthetics popular before they were born, the Retro Active trend focuses on exploring vintage styles and modernizing them. Similar to Gen Z, Millennial and Gen X creators are exploring this resurgence, finding comfort and familiarity in the creative styles of the 90s and Y2K, such as retro skateboard scenes to candy-color fashions, boom boxes, and classic video game controllers. Though Gen Z creators are influential in developing these trends, Millennials still comprise a large portion of the Creator Economy, in fact, Millennials make up 42 percent of the Creator Economy), thus propelling these trends further.

Animals and Influencers

This whimsical theme appeals to the consumer affection and engagement evoked from charming and adorable creatures and figures. Whether it be a real-life furry friend or a charming anime avatar, charismatic creatures have proven themselves to be powerful tools that attract and retain consumer interest and engagement. As a result, they have become a dominating presence in brand messaging, proliferating across sectors in the form of anime, illustrations, photography, and 3D renders.

The feelings this trend evokes tie back to what consumers and creators alike crave, and that is to feel happiness and positivity. Over the past two years, there was a 118% rise in global demand for anime. Since virtual influencers yield 3 times more engagement than humans (many finding them more trustworthy and relatable), brands are leveraging them in more and more ads.
